July 2017

A definitive buying guide from buying stupid shit from china

AllExpress

Allexpress is owned by the Alibaba Group, a huge fucking online shopping and e-commerce company. Allexpress has everything you could possibly need. They have almost every item you could possibly buy on their site. They also sell Chinese knockoffs of AliExpress items. Chinese equivalent of eBay. Reviews on Aliexpress don't mean much as Chinese sellers can just review and people will leave 5-star reviews just for getting the item in the mail.

Taobao.com

Taobao is owned by the Alibaba Group and is basically Chinese eBay. The whole site is in Chinese and all the prices are in Chinese Yuan. Most of the time you will have to pay shipping fees to get your item from Taobao. You always have to pay for shipping. Sellers will ship you goods to a factory and you can send an agent to get the item to ship it to your country or whatever. Taobao is almost always used for weird gear or replica items.

Mainly Used for...Replica Fashion

Geekbuying

Geekbuying is a relatively new (established 2014) technology-focused shopping site. Advances toward using Gearbest include their flash sales and daily deals. They also have a forum where you can post reviews so take the reviews with a grain of salt. Gearbest offers "shipping insurance" which is useless if you just paid for shipping. Gearbest sells items like clothes and shoes, but they're garbage-tier. Gearbest owns warehouses in Spain, the US, Hong Kong and the EU. Typically has the lowest prices but the worst customer service.

ebay

Ebay was originally made for collectors and is a way for ordinary people to sell to other people. This is known as C2C selling. It's a great place to sell to people who are willing to give up things and adopted it to business-to-consumer sales. Ebay isn't the best place to get truly Chinese goods at the lowest prices but is widely used by thousands of vendors and provides a large catalogue.

Mainly Used for...Everything & Second-Hand

DHgate.com

Digite doesn't bother removing copyrighted items so fakes are prevalent. Digite is also pretty much the bottom of the barrel for most fakes, don't expect those $30 shoes to be anywhere close to the real deal. Some higher-end replicas sellers use Digite as a marketplace but have listed or removed stores.

iBuygou

"iBuygou was established in 2010 with exclusive focus on re-selling Xiaomi smartphones to European countries. They (now) have after-sales support centers for customers outside of China and an EU warehouse. iBuygou has its own website and offices in Valencia, Spain. The head office and branch office are in Spain, Barcelona. To go further (iBuygou) has also applied for CE and test reports for many of their products. iBuygou has a ship with Xiaomi and we have previously been invited to attend an annual product press conferences as well.
