A definitive buying guide from buying stupid shit from china

AllExpress

Allexpress is owned by the Alibaba Group, a huge fucking online shopping and e-commerce company. Allexpress has everything you could possibly need. They have almost every item you could possibly buy on their site. They also sell Chinese knockoffs of AliExpress items. Chinese equivalent of eBay. Reviews on Aliexpress don't mean much as Chinese sellers can just review and people will leave 5-star reviews just for getting the item in the mail.

Taobao.com

Taobao is owned by the Alibaba Group and is basically Chinese eBay. The whole site is in Chinese and all the prices are in Chinese Yuan. Most of the time you will have to pay shipping fees to get your item from Taobao. You always have to pay for shipping to get your item from Taobao. Sellers will ship you goods to a factory and the factory will ship it to you or an agent to do for you. Taobao is almost always used for weird gear or random things.

Geekbuying

Geekbuying is a relatively new (established 2014) technology-focused shopping site. Advances toward using Gearbest include their flash sales and daily deals. They also offer a "WIP" section where they post reviews so take the reviews with a grain of salt. Gearbest offers "shipping insurance" so if you're worried about getting scammed, use that. They sell clothes and shoes but aren't garbage-tier. Gearbest owns warehouses in Spain, the US, Hong Kong and the EU. Typically has the lowest prices for the worst customer service.
